

April 17, 2020

<https://www.gq.com/story/where-to-buy-hand-sanitizer-right-now>

GQ Recommends

Where to Buy Hand Sanitizer Right Now

The Purell's gone, but we've found a few brands that are pivoting to help cover the gap.

BY DANIEL VARGHESE

April 17, 2020

Hand sanitizer stock, like that of kettlebells and toilet paper, has been pretty inconsistent since the pandemic hit. As stores quickly ran out of Purell, well-known luxury brands, like Aesop became the fallback for anyone who could afford the cost. Now, even the high-end fancy hand sanitizers are gone. These days, if you want hand sanitizer, you'll likely have to get it from a boutique skincare retailer right as they launch, a distillery—because hand sanitizer is mostly alcohol—that's shifted its production, or as a "free gift" for purchasing other items.

It's worth noting that hand sanitizer is not your only line of defense against the spread of the coronavirus. Much more important are socially distancing, wearing a mask outside, not touching your face, and washing your hands—often—for at least 20 seconds. But even the most studious hermit has to make occasional trips outside the house—or perhaps your job has been deemed essential, and you're in the field, doing everything you can to protect yourself. When soap and a sink aren't always available, that's when a bottle of hand sanitizer fills the void.

If you need hand sanitizer now, here are the places we've found with stock at the time we published.

The Well "Clean Hands" sanitizer

The Well $14

Buy Now

The Well says its hand sanitizer, infused with bergamot and ylang ylang oils, will ship by April 24th.